02-The Imminent Christ: Justification Within

I-Waggoner's journey for unity with the deity: The Imminent Christ.

- 1. Parallel with 1st century Christian mysticism
  - a. Mysticism is integral to Christian monasticism because the goal of the practice for the monastic is union with the deity.
  - b. Driven by his ecstatic experience
    - i. "It seems abundantly evident that his immanent views of the indwelling Christ, fueled with his panentheistic philosophy, did play a vital role in the development of his spiritualistic doctrine of 'spiritual affinities' and their 'free-love' tendencies."
- 2. Three Views of Minneapolis<sup>2</sup>
  - a. Uriah Smith, editor of the general church paper, and George Butler, president of the General Conference, and most of the pre-1888 SDA ministry, held that justification involved primarily a means of obtaining forgiveness for "sins of the past." Faith enabled adequate obedience and thus sufficient righteousness to pass the soon-coming final judgment. While sanctification thus overshadowed justification, the latter was perceived as an objective transaction by the pioneers.
  - b. JONES-WAGGONER AND JUSTIFICATION. The Jones and Waggoner focus upon the overwhelming dimensions of the law led to their conclusion that personal righteousness was inadequate both for the past and for the future. Only the righteousness of Christ satisfied the requirements of the law and such righteousness came through faith as a gift. In their scheme, however, Christ's righteousness actually replaced the past sins within the individual and became the instrument of obedience for the present and future. Christ within motif.<sup>3</sup>
  - c. ELLEN WHITE AND JUSTIFICATION. As early as 1884 Ellen White systematically attempted to lead the church to more elevated concepts of the righteousness of Christ as the perspective that would energize the church. Her guidance provided the impetus that would likewise begin reformations concerning the nature of SDA ministry and also modify its organizational concepts as well as its views of the basis for salvation.
- 3. The Minneapolis Message of Justification<sup>4</sup>
  - a. Was the Message Accepted?
  - b. The rejection of the message during the conference by many is well attested to. This was compounded by the controversy over other theological issues, such as the 10 horns, and their own views regarding the reputations of the two young men and Ellen White. Many, during the 1890s, confessed many of their errors all or in part. Even the leaders of the resistance, Smith and Butler made their amends.

- i. "This doesn't mean they ever accepted everything taught at Minneapolis or that they ever learned to appreciate Jones and Waggoner." The law in Galatians continued to rub Smith and Butler the wrong way for the rest of their lives.
- 4. It might be noted that there was no official rejection of the message at the conference; nor an official acceptance. It started and remained an individual issue and remains that way today. Waggoner and Jones would go on during the next decade under the administrations of O. A. Olson (1888-1897) and G. A. Irwin (1897-1901) to receive wide support. Preaching at Bible institutes, and various GC sessions they became the golden boys of Adventism, even teaching at our schools. Jones would later become editor of the Review in 1897, and Uriah Smith, his antagonist, would be his assistant.
  - a. Many, though, never responded to the message in a positive way and this included some leaving the church. George Knight identifies several names such as Harmon Lindsay (treasurer of the GC) who died a Christian Scientist. Clement Eldridge who managed the Review and Herald Publishing Association also left, including Ellen White's nephew, Frank Belden who also wrote a number of our hymns.<sup>5</sup>
  - b. Ellen White reported at the 1899 general conference that the message had been accepted to a large extent. Even as far back as 1896, in a letter addressed to "My brethren in America," she called for an end of the three to five month long ministerial institutes which took our workers from the field. "There was a time" she said, "when this work was made necessary, because our own people opposed the work of God by refusing the light of truth on the righteousness of Christ by faith."
    - i. But Taylor G. Bunch made an interesting observation of the '88 message. He said that one by one of those who opposed the message, accepted it and even preached it, "at least theoretically." W. C. went on in his letter to Taylor Bunch stating that while the message wasn't generally rejected or repudiated, there remained no evidence of an entering into the experience, either by ministers or the people to "the extant God was calling for, and after a few years, without any open rejection or repudiation of the doctrine, a formalism and apathy prevailed." Even Ellen White noted that Jones himself was still not converted and had not experienced the application of the very message he had preached.<sup>8</sup>
  - c. An interesting statement published in 1926 by A. G. Daniels, the then president of the GC read, "How sad, how deeply regrettable, it is that this message of righteousness in Christ should, at the time of its coming, have met with opposition on the art of the earnest, well-meaning men in the cause of God! The message has never been received, nor proclaimed, nor given free course as it should have been in order to convey to the church the measureless blessings that were wrapped within it."

- d. Daniels quotes Ellen White on the next page from 1890 regarding the rejection of the message. She wrote, "You will meet with those who will say, 'You are too much excited over this matter. You are too much in earnest. You should not be reaching for the righteousness of Christ, and making so much of that. You should preach the law.' As a people, we have preached the law until we are as dry as the hills of Galba that had neither dew nor rain. We must preach Christ in the law, and there will be sap and nourishment in the preaching that will be as food to the famishing flock of God. We must not trust in our own merits at all, but in the merits of Jesus of Nazareth." And later on Dec. 27, 1890 she wrote, "God calls men who will speak, who will cry aloud and spare not. God has raised up his messengers to do his work for this time. Some have turned from the message of the righteousness of Christ to criticize the men and their imperfections, because they do not speak the message of truth with all the grace and polish desirable."
- 5. What was the 1888 Message?
  - a. While there were no transcripts<sup>11</sup> there was a witness. We have material from this witness, and that person is Ellen White. George Knight tells us that her most thorough analysis of what Jones and Waggoner presented is found an a letter she wrote to the General Conference president, O. A. Olson on May 1, 1895.
    - i. "The Lord in His great mercy sent a most precious message to His people through Elders Waggoner and Jones. This message was to bring more prominently before the world the uplifted Savior, the sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. It presented justification through faith in the Surety; it invited the people to receive the righteousness of Christ, which is made manifest to obedience to all the commandments of God. Many have lost sight of Jesus." 12
  - b. "Centuries, ages, can never diminish the efficacy of this atoning sacrifice. This message of the gospel of His grace was to be given to the church in clear and distinct lines, that the world should no longer say, Seventh-day Adventists talk the law, the law, the law, but do not preach or believe Christ." <sup>13</sup>
- 6. Waggoner asserted that what he was preaching would bring us nearer to the belief of the reformers. He did not regard his view as a new idea at all.
  - a. "The message that was given to the people in these meetings (1888) presented in clear lines not alone the commandments of God-a part of the third angel's message-but the faith of Jesus, which comprehends more than is generally supposed. And it will be well for the third angel's message to be proclaimed in all its parts, for the people need every jot and tittle of it. It we proclaim the

No transcripts have ever been found and this story of how these books came about has proven apocryphal.

- commandments of God and leave the other half scarcely touched, the message is marred in our hands."<sup>14</sup> This was not new light (1888, 213).
- b. "You know that precious light has shone forth in connection with the law of God, as the righteousness of Christ has been presented with that law. Dr. Waggoner has opened to you precious light, not new, but old light which has been lost sight of by many minds, and is now shining forth in clear rays." <sup>15</sup>
- c. "The point that has been urged upon my mind for years is the imputed righteousness of Christ. I have wondered that this matter was not made the subject of discourses in our churches throughout the land, when the matter has been kept so constantly urged upon me, and I have made it the subject of nearly every discourse and talk that I have given to the people." <sup>16</sup>
- d. The gospel of justification by faith was the central theme of 1888. It is both doctrinal and experiential. Ellen emphasized the imputed aspect. To Waggoner, Justification always meant what it did to Augustine; "to make righteous." Both based their understanding of the word from the Latin. For Waggoner, it was Jesus in you, the imminent Christ. To Ellen, it was the Jesus for you, the one from above. The 1888 message, though not complete, pointed the Advent people to Jesus and to a more balanced view between law and gospel. While largely not rejected but neglected by the people, it has left us impotent and behind in proclaiming the message this movement was raised up by God to deliver. A movement called in time and place, but as the light began to shine, Satan steals a march upon us to make us impotent. Have we lost our apocalyptic calling? Or have we settled down to denominationalism?
- 7. Ellen White's Endorsement of Jones and Waggoner.
  - a. For a decade she "drove home the idea that God had chosen them (Jones and Waggoner) as special messengers because 'many had lost sight of Jesus' and 'justification through faith' in Him." "Why should we not see in that law the righteousness of Jesus Christ? Christ comes in and imputes to me His righteousness in His perfect obedience to that law." <sup>18</sup>
  - b. Waggoner had some problems with Justification: He viewed it as "make" just. Even the imputed aspect was the result of works which carried into sanctification and conflated the two aspects.
    - i. "By this we see that Abraham's faith could not have been imputed to him for righteousness but for the disposition to work. And since justification has reference to the law of God, it is evident that the works that make perfect the faith that secures justification, must be the works which the law requires. But this continued obedience is sanctification" Waggoner, ST. April 1, 188
  - c. "I believe without a doubt that God has given precious truth at the right time to Brother Jones and Brother Waggoner. Do I place them as infallible? Do I say that they will not make a statement or have an idea that cannot be questioned or that cannot be error? Do I say so? No, I do not say any such thing. . . But I do say God has sent light, and do be careful how you treat it. We want the truth as it is in Jesus."  $^{19}$

- 8. Many, like Haskell and Wilcox, felt Ellen's endorsement of the boys made them virtually inspired by God. Even O. A. Olson mentioned that a word from them would end all dispute in Battle Creek. Robert Weiland and Donald Short, in their 1950 work, 1888 Re-Examined, also place this type of impression of them. But we find that her support was balanced, not as one sided as some have made it.
  - a. Waggoner's idea of a spiritual connection with Christ is not far-fetched. But it's more than the idea of Christ in us and must include a Christ for us. How he defines justification as to make righteous and saw it as something God did in the past, flavored his ideas about the full gospel. Ellen White on the other hand understood that the imputed righteousness of Christ is what must be taught to our people; it's what they need to hear (see FW, 18). While the message isn't about the law, it doesn't do away with the law.
  - b. However, the message has been left to lose its power to change lives, and in place of it, a door would open to the development of a systemized theology of perfection some 40 years later. But there remains a hope for us still, to preach the uplifted Jesus. A gospel for such a time as this may restore the fire that has been missing in many areas of our denomination.
